

Pastoral Reflection
27th Sunday in Ordinary Time
October 8, 2023

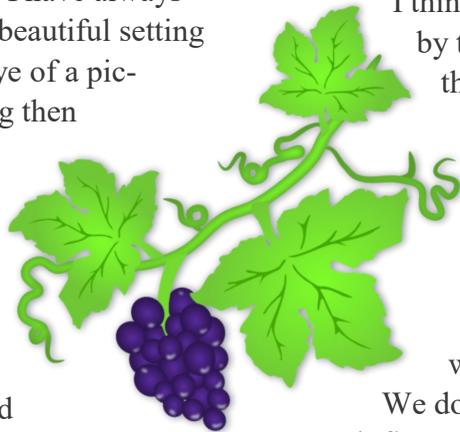

*“Therefore, I say to you,
the kingdom of God will be taken away
from you and given to a people that will produce its fruit.”*

We have a beautifully aligned motif throughout our first reading, psalm, and gospel of a vineyard. I have always loved this image and the beautiful setting it evokes in my mind’s eye of a picturesque landscape; fitting then as a metaphor for the Kingdom of God.

A bit of context first on this Gospel reading from Matthew: Jesus had just the other day majestically and disruptively entered Jerusalem, where he then proceeded to overturn the tables of the money changers, and curse a fig tree—one of the two “destructive miracles” Jesus is documented to perform.

This then appropriately sets our parable today of the vineyard as a rebuttal to the indignation and challenge of the chief priests and elders who continued to feel threatened by Jesus’ works and growing influence. The religious leaders in power felt that Jesus had begun to usurp some of what was rightfully theirs— influence, admiration—and they were not willing to stand by and let that happen. The parallels between the characters in this parable and the situation in which Jesus finds himself with the chief priests becomes apparent: God as the landowner, the prophets as the servants that had been sent, Jesus as the heir, and the tenants as the chief priests and those in power.

I think it is easy to feel shocked by the actions of the tenants in this parable, but I wonder what spiritual fruits could be found in our envisioning ourselves in the persons of the tenants. How have we been threatened by what others have gained?

We do not often relinquish power, influence, privilege, easily. But that may be exactly what is required of us, so that the kingdom of God may be allowed to produce fruit. In what ways are we clinging desperately to that which we ought to let go of? What obstacles to the “in-breaking” of the kingdom of God are we allowing to persist?

May we be good stewards of the vineyard God has given us.
