

4th Sunday of Advent December 21, 2025

Much that has been written on today's Gospel highlights Joseph's obedience and profound ability to listen to God. What stands out to me, now seven months pregnant myself, is his compassion towards Mary, a young, unwed pregnant girl. There is a great current in our culture that pushes the reality of pregnancy and early motherhood out of consciousness. This disavowal of the reality of pregnancy is evident even during this time of year when we honor Mary's fiat and her central role in Salvation history. The realities of what it meant for her to be pregnant often read as asides—half-sentences that are thrown in as part of the backdrop instead of being honored as central.

This is how God decided to come into the world—the way we all do, through a female body. Surely, we lose something in confining the implications of that to the margins.

At the same time, the American church is "obsessed" with anti-abortion doctrine, in the words of Pope Francis. A pro-life movement that is so out of touch with the realities of pregnant people and new mothers that it cannot look the realities of pregnancy, birth, and postpartum in the face, even in the context of one of its most central and dearly held beliefs, is not one that is going to be successful.

When I hear this myopic emphasis on anti-abortion messaging from those in the church, absent any concrete efforts to make the world a better and safer place to be a mother through efforts like improved healthcare, paid parental leave, and access to childcare, I often wonder how many of those promulgating this rhetoric could tell you the leading cause of maternal mortality in the United States. My guess is that not many could.

In case you're wondering: the leading cause of death in people who are pregnant or who have been pregnant in the last year is homicide, usually perpetrated by an intimate partner or family member.

This reality, considered alongside today's Gospel, illustrates how far we fall short as a church in listening to, attending to, and caring for mothers.
